The Winding Road of Entrepreneurial Leadership: Risks Taken, Lessons Learned

Successful entrepreneurs are planners, charting a path for the future and then following it diligently, right? Maybe, but not Julie Lenzer. Rather than specific milestones or concrete goals, her North Star has been to have an impact, and where that led her was beyond what she could have imagined. Opportunities emerged in unexpected and sometimes circuitous ways, usually when least expected. And while her journey is far from over, the path from working three jobs to pay for college, to successful entrepreneur to the White House has brought many lessons along the way that can help today's leaders along their path.
