Join Nicole Lynn Lewis, Joy Moore, Angel Webb Reese, and Chastity Lord for a candid conversation across generations about The Fight for Families, the Cost of Poverty, and the Power of College.

Single mothers represent 80% of single-parent households and 29% of all mothers nationwide — with over 30% experiencing poverty. They also make up more than 11% of all post-secondary students. Higher education remains one of the most powerful tools for disrupting generational poverty, yet only about 8% of single mothers attending community college graduate within six years.

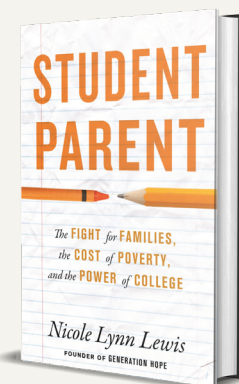

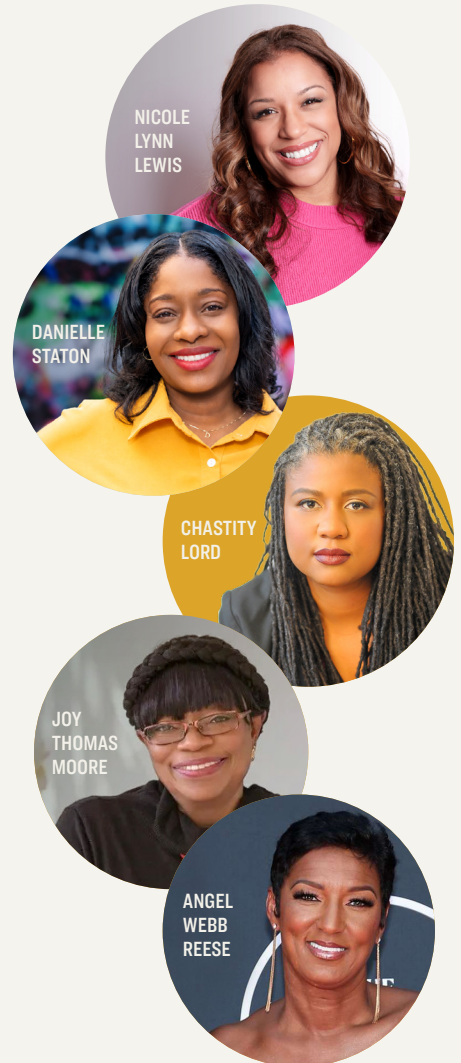

We'll dig into lived experience as single parents, explore what economic mobility actually looks like in 2026, and wrestle with an important question: Why is the conversation about the value of college always about other people's children? We'll also explore the power of narrative infrastructure and how the stories we tell — and are told — shape perceptions of single parenthood.

COPIES OF THE BOOK WILL BE AVAILABLE.
