Celebrating Black History Month

In 1926 Dr. Carter Woodson instituted a week-long celebration of the contributions of African Americans to history. Dr. Woodson chose the week of Abraham Lincoln's birthday (February 12). In recent years the observance has expanded, and now the entire month of February is celebrated as African American History month. Because of the variation in terms used, this month is also known as Afro-American History or Black History and Black Experience Month. Each year, the Association for the Study of African American Life and History, founded by Dr. Woodson in 1915, sets the theme for the month. For more information about the theme for this February, contact the association at 202-865-0053 or visit its website at www.asalh.org
