During the last few decades, gender activists in the Arab world and the Arab diaspora have contended with and challenged the limitations assumed to be inherent in Arabic's binary gender system. The talk will consider embedded grammatical features in the Arabic language and their potential for gender expression beyond the binary.

Dr. Dima Ayoub is an Assistant Professor of Arabic and C.V. Starr Junior Faculty Fellow in International Studies at Middlebury College where she was also the former director of the Middle East studies program.

Sponsored by the Provost's Office.
